This Register of Guernsey Sailing Ships is dedicated to the memory of our parents. It results from a major research project undertaken by our Father, John, over many years and with the great encouragement of our Mother, Isabel. Although originally envisaged as a hard copy book, time has moved on and with the enthusiastic input and support of Alan Howell it is now being published in electronic form. We would like to express our warm appreciation to Alan for the many hours that he has spent on the project, to the Guernsey Museum and its Director Dr. Jason Monaghan, and to the Anson Group who have provided financial support for publication.

THE AUTHOR

John Sarre was born in Guernsey on 19th July 1919 into a family with strong maritime connections. His grandfather Peter James Sarre (b. 1858) and great-grandfather Pierre Sarre (b. 1835) were both local pilots, and Pierre's brother, Jean Sarre (b. 1840), was captain of the barque Edina. Peter James also sailed on the Edina; one voyage typical of the time, lasted over a year. It carried him from Guernsey to the Cape Verde Islands then to Rio de Janeiro, on to Savannah, to Brunswick and back to Rio de Janeiro, then to Natal and Massoro in Northern Brazil, before finally returning 'home' to Liverpool. As a young boy John had also been keen to go to sea.

He attended Elizabeth College from 1932 to 1937 and then entered the University College of the South-West, now The University of Exeter, reading for a BSc. (Economics) degree. When the Second World War broke out, he gave up his university studies and was commissioned in the Wiltshire Regiment (Duke of Edinburgh's). He saw service in Northern France and Belgium, endured evacuation from Dunkirk, and then served in East Africa, being demobilised in 1946. The nearest he got to his early dreams of sailing to exotic places was to go round Africa in three stages in troopships.

On returning to Guernsey, John joined the Civil Service and soon became Secretary to the Agricultural and Horticultural Committees. He moved to the Board of Health as Chief Administrative Officer where he particularly enjoyed planning a major extension to the Princess Elizabeth Hospital; he later held posts as Director of Postal Services and Secretary to States Committees. He retired in 1981, but remained very active and among other things, served on the committee which produced the design of the Guernsey flag.

John spent much of his retirement on research into maritime history, and felt he could be described as 'an amateur historian with a special interest in sailing ships and trade.' He concentrated particularly on ships with a local connection and the result is 'Guernsey Sailing Ships'. His love for attention to detail served him well in this huge project which he undertook in neat handwriting without a computer in sight.

In 1950 John married Isabel (née McKane) who supported him strongly during his career and his retirement project. They had four children, Peter, James, Robert and Madeleine. John died in 1997 at the age of 78 shortly after writing up his research, and Isabel passed away three years later.

FOREWORD

I was privileged to know John Sarre, firstly towards the end of his civil service career when I served as a law officer of the Crown and secondly over many years as a member of St. Saviour's Church. I am honoured that he should have wanted me to write a foreword to this publication, which represents such an important piece of research into our maritime history.

Anyone serving in a senior position in Guernsey's public service leads a challenging life. At times complex issues of policy have to be absorbed and advised on, issues which in the United Kingdom would be taxing the intellects of those in the highest echelons of Government. At other times attention to the minutiae of public administration is required of the top man, simply because there is no one else. John was one of those who could excel in the discharge of both roles. It is perhaps these qualities of seeing the wider picture and where his research would lead him, and then sitting down for days at a time collating the detailed entries in the Register, that has made what he has done such a remarkable piece of work.

As the Author admits, no work such as this can be complete but assembling information on every ship that can be identified as having been registered in Guernsey has been a commendable task, on which future researchers can build.

I have enjoyed delving into the Register and reading the introductory material. This gives the opportunity for indulging in a little personal reflection. With the prosperity that has been enjoyed over the last sixty years it is easy to lose sight of how successful and adventurous the people of this Island were in the previous 200 years. Although Guernsey had had its moments of glory in the endless conflicts between England and France, it was perhaps only in the middle of the eighteenth century - shortly before the time that this Shipping Register starts - that serious wealth began to be accumulated much from ship owning. That wealth tended to be retained by a relatively small number of families. For the vast majority of islanders the growth of shipping provided little more than the opportunity to be gainfully employed in a harsh and hazardous occupation, or to use one of the many new sea routes to emigrate to pastures new. One interesting discovery was that privateering was incidental to the main activity of owning and operating trading ships, albeit that the value of the prizes seized seems in some cases very great.

One of the first things I learnt about maritime law was that the marine underwriters of Lloyds would never insure more than three quarters of the value of any hull in order to encourage, it was said, ship owners and their captains to be more careful. The toll of shipwrecks revealed in this Register right up until the twentieth century, often, sadly, with substantial loss of life is quite appalling. We can commend those who have striven and continue to strive for safety at sea, although too often we have to hear understandable laments on the restrictions that are placed today on all that we do by Health and Safety Regulations.

Today the Guernsey Register is still a valuable resource for those doing business in the Island. Now managed by the States of Guernsey it prides itself on its efficient service, maintaining a Register for ships up to 150 tons - in the main, pleasure yachts - whose owners wish to benefit from their being British Ships. Currently there are 3500 vessels so registered including about 200 fishing boats.

John Sarre's obituary, in the Guernsey Press of 2nd January 1998, in which reference was made to his having been the Island's leading maritime historian ended with these words

> "He leaves behind a wealth of information which hopefully will be preserved for future generations. This will be his memorial".

Happily, thanks to generous sponsorship, the hard work of the Guernsey Museums Service and the encouragement of John's children, that hope has now been fulfilled.

EDITORIAL NOTES

It is really pleasant to finally be writing notes to accompany the publication of this monograph about Guernsey Sailing Ships. The "Ship Register", to use our working title, has been a project-in-waiting for far too long and it seems reasonable and proper to explain why that situation arose. It may also be helpful to explain the production and editorial decisions which have been made with regard to this, our first all-digital publication.

The manuscript of John Sarre's monumental compilation about Guernsey sailing ships first came to our attention around 1998, when his widow and daughter brought a printed copy of the text and a box of computer disks to the museum. Our then Director, Peter Sarl, asked me if we could work with the electronic text on the disks, which had been created using a different word processor to the one used by the museum. I assured him that we had access to a copy of the (WordPro) software used to create the Register and didn't envisage any problems in transferring the text into the (MS Word) format used by the museum. There seemed therefore to be no technical impediment to stop us fulfilling the undertaking made by our governing body, to publish the manuscript in our Museum Monograph series.

There were other issues, however, which conspired against the original move towards publication. The main one was money, as the original fund granted by the States of Guernsey for producing Museum Monographs was more or less exhausted and what remained was already the subject of prior commitment. Also, like many other academic publishers, the museum was discovering that the highly laudable aim of producing specialist literature in printed form was becoming increasingly unviable – as all public-sector spending came under ever-closer scrutiny.

The outlay on large enough quantities of printed material to bring the unit cost down to an acceptable level meant not only a big financial outlay but also generated a large quantity of stock - which would then need to be carefully stored. Although these matters were not my direct concern, I was made aware of the difficulties and we therefore began to look at alternative publication methods. As the Ship Register was clearly going to be around 400 pages in length, with more than 50 plates, a hard copy publication would be both expensive to produce and somewhat unwieldy. The advantages of a fully searchable digital edition began to seem increasingly beguiling, especially so, in the case of such a detailed reference work.

Experiments were made using the facilities provided within Lotus Smartsuite (of which WordPro is a component) exporting the Register text from WordPro in a variety of formats, including the web-oriented hypertext mark-up language (HTML) and also Adobe's Portable Document Format (PDF). Several different ways of importing the text into MS Word were also tried. While all the straightforward text pages converted without problem, the 300+ pages of the actual register gave rather indifferent results except in the case of PDF conversion. Wherever fractions were (very frequently) used in the ship tonnage figures, the clever file conversion routines produced a small graphic (picture) of that page area and embedded it in the surrounding text. These were not really usable, as the low resolution of the graphics meant that the small fraction figures were hardly legible and, as they were a fixed size, any attempt to enlarge them merely exposed their failings even further. The PDF conversions, on the other hand, were entirely successful and a working electronic copy of the Ship Register (as a typescript and without images) has been in existence for several years. However, without identified funding to catalyse the introduction of a realistic publication deadline, the project simply remained on hold, never out of mind but always outside the group of currently achievable priorities.

Happily the funding problem was recently resolved. At the behest of Dr Jason Monaghan, the current Museum Director, Anson Group Ltd. kindly agreed to sponsor the production of a digital version of the Ship Register. In the meantime we had also become increasingly aware that digital publications hold the same legal status as traditional hard-copy versions and that the initial production of a digital version would not entirely preclude the possibility of a hard copy version in the future. Focus therefore switched from 'some time in the future' to 'A.S.A.P.' with respect to publication and the project finally came to the top of the priority list in May 2007.

For technical reasons we have decided to stay with the PDF format. It offers the best way of rendering the original fractionated tonnage figures from the WordPro file which still constitutes the master digital copy of the work's 'Record and Register' section. All the rest of the publication has digital master copies in MS Word format and the long term plan is to do the same for the 'Record and Register', replacing the current fractionated figures (generated by WordPro's proprietary Equation Editor) with standard text, probably using superscript and subscript characters in the form: '76 $^{85}/_{3500}$ tons'. The register could also be transferred into a database which would be easy to update as new research comes to light.

The current publication is formatted for A4 paper and styled to match the existing hard-copy monographs in our series. It consists of six separate PDF files which are extensively 'bookmarked' and crosslink seamlessly between each other. There are click-able hyperlinks from the 'Record and Register' entries to any corresponding plates - these are indicated by blue text, in the default manner for web pages. Most other hyperlinks between pages are also highlighted in blue text. The text itself is fully searchable using the inbuilt Acrobat search facility.

The delayed publication in digital form has also had a beneficial side-effect in allowing us to include far more illustrations than originally intended. As the publication was planned for print, at a time when colour reproductions were more expensive and the total number of illustrations was also a serious issue, most of the plates were going to be in monochrome - very few in colour. Although we have used the existing monochrome images for the subjects in private ownership (mainly to avoid the inevitable delays which would otherwise be introduced) we have substituted colour images in the case of all items from the museum's own collection. We have also chosen to include all of the other relevant ship illustrations from our collections (irrespective of their present condition), effectively doubling the number of plates in the work

Finally, I should say that while it has been a privilege to work on this remarkable project, my knowledge of maritime history is limited, so I have been very reticent about editing the actual text. The decision to increase the number of plates inevitably raised a few queries or points which needed further explanation - these have been inserted where relevant, using the Acrobat commenting tool.

PREFACE

Circumstances prevented me from following in the footsteps of a number of my ancestors and relatives who were sailors, three of whom were ships' captains. This maritime background was probably the reason why, when I was young, I began to record details of ships and their voyages, and revived this interest in later years, particularly when I retired, concentrating on Guernsey connections. I found that most of the Guernsey Shipping Registers had been destroyed during the 1939 - 1945 War and that the Transcripts of the Registers held at the Public Record Office at Kew in England were far from complete. The effect was that there was no reasonably complete record of Guernsey sailing vessels and I set out to try to remedy this deficiency. The result is the Register and Record that forms the main part of this book.

INTRODUCTION

1 - History of Development of Sailing Ships and Trade

It would seem appropriate to introduce the Register with a brief history of the development of Guernsey sailing ships and the most important trades in which they were engaged.

It is not known when the first Guernsey ships put to sea. There were vessels trading with Normandy and Brittany and with England in Roman times and earlier, but as yet it is not known if any of these vessels belonged to Guernsey. Certainly by the 14th century there were Guernsey ships involved in trade - we know of one in 1325 and 10 were recorded in 1370 - and Guernsey ships were trading in the English Channel and bringing wine from Bordeaux for the Island and for England. There developed considerable trade with English ports, especially London and the ports west of Southampton, and of course still with the French ports, a trade which continued throughout the centuries when England and France were not at war. For many years major exports from Guernsey were fish and knitted wool stockings and other wearing apparel.

Merchants were continually spreading their activities further afield, for example to northern Europe as well as Spain and Portugal and from the 1500s there were Guernsey ships sailing to Newfoundland to bring back cod, replacing the declining local fishery. It is hardly surprising that Guernseymen travelled that far, as the Normans and Bretons who were strong in the cod trade lived close by and were "cousins". The ships were small and in comparison with France and England only a limited number of ships took part. In 1700 six Guernsey ships (and six Jersey ships) carried cod and this was probably a significant part of the Island's trading activities.

Then things changed. Guernsey merchants and shipowners became less involved in the cod trade than those from Jersey. From the late 1600s they began to take part in the more exciting ventures of privateering whenever England was at war and smuggling. Some shipowners were involved in more than one activity and later some were concerned in all four - cod trade, smuggling, privateering and operating their own ships in trade. At the same time the mundane trades continued, such as cross-channel and carrying coal from Newcastle to Guernsey and France. They were sailing also from South Wales to Irish ports as well as to French ports as far south as Bordeaux, the Mediterranean and Africa.

Nevertheless a few Guernsey firms continued in the Newfoundland cod trade into the 1800s, at least 21 vessels from the Island being involved in 1814. Possibly of greater financial significance to Guernsey was the same trade in Gaspé and Cape Breton Island, a trade which had developed considerably after the defeat of the French in Canada. There was substantial Guernsey interest in this cod trade and at one time a partnership was formed between the Janvrin family of Jersey and the Tupper family of Guernsey which, later, included other leading merchants and shipowners of Guernsey, Carteret Priaulx & Co and the de Lisles. This partnership continued until the 1820s and for some time the Guernsey merchants held a majority share in the enterprise and so had a very strong involvement. The fish was carried mainly to Spain, Portugal or the Mediterranean, and on the return voyage the vessels carried salt from Spain, or from Liverpool with provisions, clothing and stores for the people at the fishing stations.

What might be called commercial smuggling, mainly to south-west England, commenced in the 1600s. At one time goods were carried also to Ireland and even to Scotland. Most Guernsey firms were more involved in bringing into Guernsey the required goods (rum from the West Indies, brandy and gin from France and Spain, tobacco from Virginia and tea from Rotterdam and Gothenburg, brought there by the East India companies) and selling them to smugglers than in actually operating smuggling vessels. At the same time they continued to import goods, especially wine from Spain, Portugal, France and Madeira, for storage in Guernsey and re-sale legally in England. The smuggling continued until 1808, when leading merchants united to form a Chamber of Commerce and declared their resolution not to carry on from Guernsey any illicit trade with the mother country, so as to preserve the few channels of trade open to them. They became so righteous that they decided to urge the merchants of Jersey and Alderney to take the same action.

Privateering was a major activity from the late 17th century until 1815. Many vessels were fitted out for "cruises", that is hunting enemy vessels, but whilst there were some spectacular successes and at times French trade was severely disrupted, often no prizes or only small prizes were taken, resulting in heavy financial loss to the owners. The enemy also had privateers and warships and Guernsey shipowners also suffered losses of vessels; during the period 1807 to 1815 at least 30 Guernsey-registered vessels were captured by the enemy.

While these activities were being carried out other Guernsey ships were engaged in normal trade. They had been crossing the Atlantic to places south of Canada, at not quite such an early date, although trading to Virginia began in the 1600s, later expanding to the West Indies and the Caribbean (including Venezuela and the Guyanas) and by 1804 at the latest to other parts of South America. The first Guernsey vessel known to have rounded Cape Horn and enter the Pacific Ocean was the brig ANTELOPE, which was engaged by several Spanish ships of war in 1809. The main trade to the West Indies was the conveying of wine, brandy, gin etc. from France and the Iberian Peninsula, the Mediterranean and Madeira, the ships returning to Europe with sugar, coffee, indigo and rum. They were still trading to the West Indies in the 1880s.

Before 1826 Guernsey merchants were prohibited by Act of Parliament from exporting Guernsey produce and manufactures and the produce of other places to the British possessions in the Americas. Any such exports, except those for Newfoundland, had to be cleared by Customs at English or Irish ports and this meant, at least on some occasions, discharging the cargo - a costly business. This restriction was also applied to export to former French, Dutch and Danish colonies when they were taken by the British, thus further limiting the number of ports to which Guernsey vessels could trade. Because of this restriction, Guernsey merchants developed trade with Brazil, Havana in Cuba, Haiti, St Domingo and other Spanish colonies, where they could trade freely and without interference from the English Parliament.

Trade was disrupted during wars but was still carried out and many Guernsey merchants were more involved in trade than privateering. Acts of Parliament of 1798 and 1803 made it obligatory for foreign-going merchantmen to sail in convoy unless they held Letters of Marque, so many owners operated armed merchantmen and took out Letters of Marque. Although their vessels were more likely to be captured and insurance premiums were higher, they thus avoided the disadvantages of convoys - waiting for weeks for a convoy to be formed and slower passages. It is significant that over two-thirds of the vessels with Letters of Marque during the Napoleonic War were wholly or largely engaged in trade. This suggests that in spite of some losses as a result of enemy action, it was more profitable for shipowners to engage in trade than in privateering. A captain who held a Letter of Marque could legally capture any enemy vessel that came his way while on his voyage, and a number of such captures were made.

War at that time was different from that in more modern times as, for example, when the Carteret Priaulx agent in Gibraltar was able to cross to Algeciras in Spain during the Napoleonic War and arrange through an intermediary to buy back one of the firm's ships and its cargo of Cornish pilchards that had been captured by a Spanish privateer a short time before. Also in the midst of that war, agents in the south of France were writing to Guernsey merchants that they had not heard from them for some time and quoting very favourable prices for wine and brandy. The intention would have been to use neutral ships or a neutral flag, the use of which was not entirely shunned by the islanders.

The question is often asked - where were the Guernsey ships built? It can be assumed that small boats for fishing and coastal trade were built in the Island from early days, but only five vessels are known at present to have been built in Guernsey before 1815 that were large enough for overseas trade or privateering; the largest of these, the brigantine DUNDAS of 164 tons built in 1794, was sold to Jersey owners. Records show that there were many vessels registered in Guernsey, for example at least 45 in 1804 and at least 95 in 1807. Because the earliest available Transcripts of Guernsey Shipping Registers are for 1817, it is not known how many vessels were built in Guernsey before that date, but it is certain that more than five were built. The records of owners of vessels with Letters of Marque included a shipbuilder in 1797, another shipbuilder in 1803, a shipwright in 1807, a ropemaker in 1809 and another shipwright in 1812, indicating existing businesses in shipbuilding. It is known that Alexander Thom had a shipbuilding yard near La Piette in 1812.

The majority of ships used were British-built. During the period 1789 to 1811, 61 vessels ranging from 16 tons to 178 tons were transferred from the Fowey Register alone to the Guernsey Register, 51 of them built at Fowey or Mevagissey and 7 at other south-west ports. A further 22 vessels were transferred from the Exeter Register, most of them built in Devon, and about 60 from the Weymouth Register, most of them prizes. The number of vessels employed which had been captured from the enemy during the Revolutionary and Napoleonic Wars was substantial, for example 35 out of 114 on the Register at 30 September 1810, and 30 out of 66 at 30 September 1814.

Shipbuilding in Guernsey really got going from 1815. There was a shortage of vessels after years of war and a large demand for goods which had been in short supply in the Americas and Europe. Shipbuilding yards were constructed along the east coast from Havelet to St Sampson's, building over 300 vessels between 1815 and 1894, a few of which were for English or Jersey owners. A substantial alternative use of the yards was in repairing, altering, re-rigging and particularly in lengthening ships, 103 Guernsey-registered vessels being lengthened during that period, in which 15 were lengthened twice. The earliest vessel known to have been lengthened was in 1823 and the greatest increase in length was 29 feet. This was a relatively cheap way of obtaining a larger vessel or increasing speed compared with having a new vessel built. One firm, Thoume Moullin & Co, had nearly all its vessels built in Cape Breton Island, many of them by Guernseymen.

One of the boosts to local shipbuilding was the growing trade with South America in which Guernsey vessels participated by 1804. In 1814, 18 Guernsey vessels were in this trade, but by 1812 the number had risen to at least 32, mainly brigs. Until the early 1820s, many of the vessels made voyages in succession to South America, to the West Indies and to Newfoundland. The main American destination was Rio de Janeiro, sometimes calling at Bahia, Monte Video or Buenos Aires, with some voyages to the West Indies. Vessels from South America carried sugar, coffee, cotton, tallow, bones or cattle hides sometimes to Mediterranean ports, mainly Trieste, then proceeding to ports such as Tarragona, Alicante or Sète to load wines and spirits for South America. At other times they carried the South American exports to North Europe, mainly Antwerp, Hamburg or Baltic ports, then returning to Rio via Guernsey. The vessels brought to Guernsey a variety of goods from North Europe, ranging from Dutch cheeses to wheat and oats, butter to copper sheets, timber to red and blue pantiles and paving tiles and even, on one voyage, two pianofortes. Much of the cheese was re-exported. The trade was important enough to justify several Guernsey merchants setting up their own import/export agency in Rio, with a Guernseyman in charge, with subsequently a subsidiary in Bahia (Salvador) further north in Brazil. For a time a service was operated between Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Aires and Cape Town.

After the end of the Napoleonic War in 1815, two other trades expanded. The first was in the export of granite. The export had been going on since Roman times, but in the 1820s there was a substantial increase. In time there developed almost a shuttle service. Vessels carried granite from St Sampson's mainly to London, then proceeded in ballast to load coal at Newcastle and other north-east coast ports, unloading at St Peter Port or St Sampson's Harbour and occasionally at French ports or English Channel ports, then starting again from St Sampson's. The increase in trade can be seen from the vessels involved; whereas in 1813 a total of 38 vessels used St Sampson's, in 1865 there were 370 shipments of granite in Guernsey ships alone and in 1903 still 80, apart from many more shipments in other British sailing vessels and in steamers. Many larger and better vessels engaged in overseas trade gave way to steamers and finished their lives in the coal and stone trade. It was a hard, dirty trade with stone dust one way and coal dust the other; unpleasant, but not as unpleasant as for the crew members of vessels who collected guano - bird droppings - for fertiliser use from islands off the coasts of South Africa and South America.

The second trade was with a different kind of vessel. These vessels were mainly the fast schooners, called clipper schooners, and some cutters, specially built to carry fresh oranges and tangerines as quickly as possible from the Azores (the Western Isles as then called) to various British ports. In the Azores, as in some other places, the vessels had to load at exposed anchorages and when faced with gales had to run for the open sea, though several were lost on the coast. They were engaged in this trade in the winter months, generally October to March, and during the remainder of the year traded elsewhere, mainly carrying dried fruit, such as raisins, currants and figs, from Mediterranean ports and sugar from Caribbean ports to Britain. The trade had been well established by 1830 and continued until after 1870. The effect of this trade on the Guernsey shipbuilding industry is shown in the fact that between 1817 and 1833, 32 brigs and snows but only 3 schooners were built, whereas between 1834 and 1853, 25 brigs and snows and 69 schooners were built.

Out of the fruit trade came the man who became Guernsey's best known ship-owner and probably its most famous entrepreneur. William Le Lacheur was the son of a farmer who went to sea and by the age of 24 commanded his first ship. Within two years he was part-owner of two "fruiters" and before long he was sailing round Cape Horn and along the west coast of Central and South America. Here he found that the coffee growers of Costa Rica could not ship their coffee to London except through Chile, a disadvantage as the Chilean coffee was regarded as inferior. He promised to help them and the following year, in 1843, he loaded the brig MONARCH with coffee at Puntarenas for London. He arranged for vessels to continue carrying coffee to London and so played a large part in the social and economic development of Costa Rica.

The trade was continued by the firm until 1886; by then the increasing use of steamships and the opening of the port of Limon on the Caribbean coast of Costa Rica had made the use of sailing vessels uneconomic. During the 44 years of trading up to eight vessels at a time were employed. An average of five vessels a year made the return voyage, rounding Cape Horn both ways every year, some calling at South American ports or Honolulu before making for Puntarenas. During those voyages not one vessel was lost and, as far as is known, not one had to put into port to repair damage - most of these vessels were built in Guernsey. The smallest vessel to undertake the voyage, the fruit schooner SIR THOMAS MANSELL in 1844, was only 59 tons and 65 feet in length and the largest vessels used in the last years were over 600 tons and over 165 feet long. The economic and social benefits to the country were such that the Costa Rican Government published an official obituary on William Le Lacheur's death and issued a stamp and a banknote depicting the ship WILLIAM LE LACHEUR, which was launched the year following his death in 1863.

At about the same time as the Costa Rica coffee trade was developing, the close relationship with Rio de Janeiro diminished and many Guernsey ships joined the general carrying trade and travelled the world. The largest fleet in the Island, with a total of 12 ships at one time, was owned by G F Carrington & Co. Like William Le Lacheur, Gustavus Frederick Carrington started small, as a sailmaker's apprentice, but he had owned ships for 47 years when he died in 1895. Many vessels traded in the Atlantic and often proceeded from Guernsey to South Wales to load a cargo of coal or steel before crossing the ocean. A typical voyage was that of 369 days by the barque EDINA from Guernsey to the Cape Verde Islands to load salt for Rio de Janeiro, there loaded coffee for Savannah in the United States, ballast to Brunswick and from there back to Rio de Janeiro with timber, ballast to Natal in northern Brazil and finally cotton to Liverpool; the next voyage was to Barbados for sugar. The company owned the first vessel to make the voyage from Europe (sailing from Liverpool) through the Great Lakes to Chicago, but its most famous vessel was the ship GOLDEN SPUR of 636 tons, a tea-clipper for some years and the largest vessel built in Guernsey. She came to Guernsey only once in her 15 years of sailing. She made five voyages with tea, taking part in Tea Races, and carried sugar to England from the Philippines; then, like several other Guernsey vessels, she traded generally between various ports in the Far East from Singapore to Yokohama.

A later trade was the carrying of live cattle from northern Spain for slaughter in England or Guernsey, but the only sailing vessels left at the end of the nineteenth century were those in the coal and stone trade. Some families continued using sailing vessels in this trade into the twentieth century including the Doreys until 1915, the Birds until 1919 and the Sarnia Shipping Company (William Stranger) until 1931.

Over the years Guernsey sailing ships had carried from Guernsey such goods as stockings and other knitwear, wine and other re-exports, bricks to Australia, biscuits and ship's bread to Newfoundland, and potatoes to Cuba and Bahia, as well as people. So far only one definite case is known of a Guernsey owner and a Guernsey ship being involved in the African slave trade, but on at least one occasion in the 1600s children in Alderney who were not being looked after properly by their parents were shipped to Virginia, possibly virtually as slaves. Other passengers at times were indigent poor whom it was considered cheaper to ship to North America and Australia than to maintain in an institution in Guernsey, such as the Guernsey boys and girls sold in Boston, Massachusetts, in 1752. Some people went voluntarily to North America and Australia, although one wonders how happy they were sometimes on arrival - for example the 100 passengers on one schooner of 110 tons and 66 feet long which took 11 weeks to reach Philadelphia from Guernsey in the 1800s. Some people went from Guernsey to Van Diemen's Land (Tasmania) as early as 1828 in an English ship taking six months to reach Hobart. The first Guernsey vessel to go to Australia direct, the barque WILLIAM, sailed in 1841. Subsequently a number of Guernsey vessels undertook voyages to Australia with emigrants and others traded to Ceylon and Burma.

Many Guernsey vessels were lost on coasts and reefs around the world, many others were lost without trace, often in violent storms and others suffered from other hazards such as piracy and yellow fever. Nevertheless some crews were fortunate to survive. The following incidents are typical examples of these hazards:

- The cutter HORATIO which set sail with a crew of three from Guernsey for Alderney in 1853 was caught in a gale and when all the sails had been lost or broken the vessel was tossed to and fro for one week before coming to land - on the south coast of England.
- The voyage of the brig SIR JOHN DOYLE which sailed from Guernsey to Newfoundland, probably to load with fish, reached the Banks where she stayed for several days but was obliged to give up due to continuous storms, returning to Guernsey on 24 Dec 1814 with some damage.
- The schooner-brig GUERNSEY started a voyage in Guernsey in 1828 for Jamaica and Cape Breton Island but after leaving Jamaica was forced by contrary winds to return to Guernsey, saving on the way the crew of a large English ship which had encountered a succession of storms.
- The brigantine TELEMACHUS was boarded by pirates in 1835 while on passage from Cape Breton to Barbadoes with fish and robbed of provisions, the ship's boat and other items. The crew members lost their clothes, watches and other belongings.
- The barque BROTHERS arrived at Demerara from London in 1856 with a Guernseyman as master and a crew of 15. Seven of the 14 Guernsey members of the crew died of yellow fever.
- Four Guernsey coal ships disappeared without trace in a gale in Oct 1882 in the North Sea.

- Some vessels were caught up in wars, such as the wars of independence in South America: the brig EAGLE was seized off the coast of Chile in 1817 and the ship ALGESIRAS was taken off the coast of Venezuela in 1815 and fitted out as a cruiser against the Spaniards, but later released.

The last attempt to keep a sailing ship fleet in operation came in 1932-33 when Mr Le Reverend bought three large schooners, but the company remained in being only a couple of years.

Postscript

People now pay large sums to visit as tourists places that Guernsey sailors were paid poorly to sail to, from Honolulu to Australia and Hong Kong to Rio de Janeiro and North America, from the Mediterranean and Madeira to Venezuela, Barbados and Jamaica, and particularly to islands visited by cruise liners, such as Puerto Rico, St Thomas and St Croix.

INTRODUCTION

2 - Notes on the Registration of Sailing Ships

Ships were registered from the mid-17th century, but central government records did not commence until after the passing of an Act of Parliament in 1786 entitled "An Act for the further Increase and Encouragement of Shipping and Navigation". Under this Act every vessel was required to be registered at the port to which it belonged, being the port from and to which it usually traded, and a Certificate of Registry was required to be obtained. The Certificate gave the name of the vessel and set out a description of the vessel and the name of the owner or owners, place and date of building and name of the master, all given on oath. Guernsey was a registration port.

The Certificates of Registry issued at each port were required to be progressively numbered, hence the reference, for example 11/1838 in respect of the Schooner ACE OF TRUMPS, being the 11th entry in the Register in 1838. If ownership of a vessel changed or if any alteration was made to the vessel, it had to be registered "de novo" and a new certificate issued. Changes of masters were also recorded. The Shipping Registers and Transcripts thereof record details of the certificates of registration issued.

The Act applied to vessels of 15 tons burthen (i.e. carrying capacity) and upwards which were decked, but at a later date smaller vessels were registered. In the following Register there are several vessels described as open boats which became registered when subsequently they were decked.

The Act described the method of measuring the tonnage of a vessel, a method which was changed by later Acts. Originally fractions of a ton were in 94ths, subsequently in 3500ths and eventually, and more sensibly, in 100ths.

One provision of the Act which was of particular significance to Guernsey was that no ship taken as a prize and condemned in any court of admiralty could be registered in Guernsey in the first instance. Such a ship was required to be registered first at one of the following ports, namely Southampton, Weymouth, Exeter, Plymouth, Falmouth, Liverpool or Whitehaven. Having been so registered a ship could then be re-registered at Guernsey. This imposition was so that "the duties now by law due and payable to His Majesty on such ships and vessels may be levied and collected".

Included in the following Register is information about four prizes first registered at Exeter and 45 prizes first registered at Weymouth. It is unfortunate that the Registers of Southampton, Falmouth and Plymouth, like those of Guernsey for the relevant period, no longer exist; it is probable that Plymouth Registers in particular would have yielded much useful information.

INTRODUCTION

3 - Content of the Register

The Register originated with the names of vessels obtained from the late Eric W. Sharp's records, particularly his articles published in the Transactions of La Société Guernesiaise.

To these names were added the names of vessels obtained from the records collected by Dr. Alan Jamieson, particularly from BT 6/191 (Papers relating to Ships' Registers), BT 107 and 108 (Transcripts of Shipping Registers), ADM 7 (Register of Passes and Foreign Passes and Protections against Impressment), ADM 68 (Register of Seamen's Sixpences), all held at the Public Record Office, and from the Guernsey Shipping Register and other Maritime History Records; also from the records of Letters of Marque collected by Dr. W.R.Meyer from High Court of Admiralty papers held at the Public Record Office. All the information in the foregoing sources was obtained for the purposes of research for the Maritime History of the Channel Islands "A People of the Sea" published by Methuen in 1986.

The list of names was further increased by the work done by myself, members of my family and other persons, especially from BT 162 (Annual Lists of Ships Registered), BT 163 (Quinquennial Lists of Ships Registered), ADM 7 (Convoys), Lloyd's List, Lloyd's Registers, Mercantile Navy Lists, Transcripts of Shipping Registers of the Ports of Fowey and Portsmouth, the Guernsey, Jersey, Exeter, Bideford, Weymouth and Lyme Regis Shipping Registers, Memorial University of Newfoundland Records and also from newspapers and Guernsey and Jersey Almanacs.

The result of the research has been to produce some information about more than 1600 Guernsey vessels. The volume of information about individual vessels varies considerably partly because of the varying availability of records.

Shipping registers or transcripts and shipping returns for Guernsey are not available or not complete for the following years:-

1786 to 1806

1811 to 1813

1890 to 1916

However the names of many Guernsey-registered vessels which are not in the available Shipping Registers have been obtained from other sources and it is thought that not many names are missing.

It is possible some of the gaps may be filled by searching shipping registers and port books of ports other than those already researched for vessels transferred to or from the Guernsey Register or sailing to or from Guernsey.

The vessels registered at Guernsey from 1890 to 1916 and in 1921 can virtually all be traced from the Mercantile Navy Lists published annually. The only exceptions will be vessels on the Register for less than 12 months and not on the Register at 30 November, when the annual list was closed. Some of these lists have already been checked.

Vessels included in the Register are -

- vessels on the Guernsey Shipping Register whether built or owned in Guernsey or elsewhere, i.e. registered at Guernsey, often recorded as "of Guernsey";
- vessels built in Guernsey but not owned nor registered there;
- vessels owned in Guernsey but built or registered elsewhere, including vessels whose managing owner was a Guernsey person or company; and - in a few special cases, vessels registered before 1786.

The possibilities for adding information are almost endless and I decided to impose limitations on the work. I concentrated on obtaining additional information about vessels particularly relating to the period ended about 1825, for which information is less readily available. I have recorded changes in tonnage and rig and when a vessel was lengthened or rebuilt, but not dimensions of vessels because of frequent changes. The dimensions of many vessels are available in my records or Priaulx Library records. Where known I have mentioned the trades in which Guernsey-owned vessels were involved and in many other cases I have included sample voyages. The movements of Guernsey vessels were recorded in newspapers especially from 1820 onwards.

Information which could be added would be, for example, the names of all masters and owners, all voyages, cargoes, dimensions of vessels, all crew members and newspaper reports. I have not researched fully the Amirauté Court records at the Greffe.

Very little of the information in the Register came from the original source, and much has been transcribed more than once, but I must accept responsibility for any errors there may be.

In cases where I know that there is a picture of a vessel which has not been illustrated, I have recorded that fact.

INTRODUCTION

4 - Notes on the Register

The comment "Not owned in Guernsey" or "Owned in Jersey" (or England etc.) means the vessel was not owned in Guernsey at any time as far as is known; it applies mainly to vessels built and owned outside Guernsey but registered in Guernsey, as in the case of many Jersey-owned vessels in the second half of the 19th century.

Where an owner's name has been given he will normally be "of Guernsey" unless otherwise stated.

The note "Privateer" alongside the name of a vessel indicates a vessel with a Letter of Marque which it is known was fitted out and used only as a privateer. Many vessels issued with Letters of Marque such as the brig LA RUSE, were fitted out and used as privateers for a time and as armed merchant vessels engaged in trade at other times. Others, like the ship L'INVENTION were armed merchant traders and not employed as privateers at any time.

Entries in italics indicate that it has not been possible to verify the information given, for example that the vessel is a Guernsey ship, or it is not established that the vessel is the same as another or others of the same name, or that the information relates to the vessel named.

Descriptions of rig have been given as in the Registers or Transcripts where available, rather than as given by Coysh, Sharp, almanacs, newspapers etc. In addition the rig has been given as it was when the vessel was in Guernsey ownership and/or registration and not as it was earlier or later. In other cases there may be slight differences between this Register and other records. As an example, a number of vessels were repaired or "altered" (e.g. lengthened or re-built) in Guernsey yards and were reported as launched when work was completed. These were sometimes taken to be new launchings.

The name of the master of a vessel at the time of the event recorded and where known to me is shown in brackets. The names of some owners, whether of shares in a vessel or the registered owners, have also been shown mainly prior to 1825 and since 1890, but in respect of both masters and owners often there were so many changes it is considered not practicable to record them all in this work. This information is available in Almanacs for the years from 1817 onwards or, more accurately, from the Public Record Office at Kew.

Changes in measurements of vessels occurred either because of statutory requirements as in 1836 and 1855, when the method of calculating tonnage was changed or because of alterations to the vessel, for example lengthening the vessel or providing more accommodation for the crew.

Other information about the vessels, such as length, whether there was a figurehead etc., is available in Maritime History Records at the Priaulx Library and at Kew.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I would like to thank the numerous persons and institutions who have provided information for this book or provided access to the sources used. Apart from the many named in the section "Abbreviations and Sources", my thanks go to the Trustees of the National Maritime Museum, to Mr T F Downton, Assistant Registrar of British Ships at Guernsey and to Mr David Godfrey of Les Vardes, Guernsey. My thanks go also to the Poole Maritime Trust who kindly allowed me to reproduce from their leaflet "Recognising Sailing Ships" the illustrations of various rigs of sailing ships and the descriptions of masts and sails; also to the owners of pictures who agreed to allow me to use photographs of their pictures and to the States Heritage Committee in relation to pictures in the Committee's custody.

I am particularly grateful for the voluntary work carried out by several people to help me, especially Mrs Janice Tostevin who searched for and provided most of the Lloyd's List references and some of the High Court of Admiralty information, my daughter Madeleine for undertaking the tedious task of typing the work and putting it on to a disk and for extracting information from Weymouth and Lyme Regis Shipping Registers, my son Robert for doing the same with Exeter and Bideford Shipping Registers, and Leonard and Catharine McKane for research at Public Record Office, all of which information has contributed greatly to the value of the book.

My especial thanks go to both my wife, Isabel, and the late Rona Cole, former Director of Guernsey Museums, whose encouragement gave the impetus needed to turn my researches into a book.

4 – Sailing Ships - Their Masts and Sails

Sailing ships are distinguished by their rig and number of masts. There are two types of rig -"square-rig", which indicates four-sided sails attached to yards across the masts, and "foreand-aft rig", which indicates triangular or rectangular shaped sails fitted between masts. Vessels of both rigs also carry one or more triangular sails for'ard of the foremast, usually to a bowsprit.

MASTS are named from for'ard - fore, main and mizzen, but in small vessels of two masts they are usually called main and mizzen or fore and main depending on the rig.

Square-rigged masts were usually divided into three sections - lower mast, topmast and topgallant mast.

Fore-and-aft rigged masts were divided into two parts - lower mast and topmast.

SAILS - when naming a sail, the name of the mast comes first, followed by the name of the sail e.g. fore upper topsail, mizzen lower topgallant.

The names of the sails on a square-rigged mast starting from deck level are: Course, lower topsail, upper topsail, lower topgallant, upper topgallant, royal, skysail and moonraker.

Additional sails between and outside the masts are known as staysails and studdingsails, respectively.

Sometimes the mizzen course of a full-rigged ship was called the crossjack (pronounced cro'jack).

Triangular sails set for'ard of the foremast in both square-rigged and fore-and-aft vessels are named in order from the foremast for'ard i.e. forestaysail, jib, outer jib and flying jib. In small one-masted vessels fore-and-aft rigged, the sail for-ard of the mast is called the jib and that abaft (behind) the mast the mainsail.

This publication marks the culmination of a lifetime's interest and research into the history of Guernsey sailing ships by John W. Sarre. Sadly he did not live to see the production of this edition but it stands as a fitting epitaph to his enthusiasm for the subject and attention to detail. It is likely to be consulted as the authoritative work of reference about Guernsey sailing ships for many years to come.

CONTENTS INCLUDE

- FOREWORD BY SIR DE VIC CAREY Q.C.
- INTRODUCTIONS, INCLUDING THE HISTORY OF SHIPPING AND REGISTRATION (29 PAGES)
- THE REGISTER – DETAILED REFERENCES ARRANGED ALPHABETICALLY (311 PAGES)
- ILLUSTRATIONS OF SHIPS FROM MUSEUMS AND PRIVATE COLLECTIONS (114 PLATES)
- HISTORIC ILLUSTRATIONS OF PORTS VISITED BY GUERNSEY SHIPS (20 PLATES)
- FOUR APPENDICES, INCLUDING DETAILS OF INFORMATION SOURCES (29 PAGES)

The Anson Group was founded in Guernsey in 1998 and has acquired an enviable reputation for delivering high quality advisory, administration and company secretarial services to all types of investment funds as well as providing Guernsey's own CREST compliant registrar. The Anson Group is named after Admiral George Anson who once captained HMS Crescent before his good friend Sir James de Saumarez became captain with Guernseyman Jean Breton as his pilot. In 1794 Breton was presented a medal by the British Crown in recognition of his skill saving HMS Crescent from a pursuing superior French fleet by drawing them close before escaping up the narrow channels and reefs on Guernsey's west coast. Breton and Anson Group's founder have genealogical links. Sailing and maritime history are of great interest to the Anson Group and the firm is proud to support this authoritative and academically invaluable register.

	The vessel left Guernsey in Jan 1831 and for 20 days of bad weather battled her way to St. Michael's. On 3 Feb the weather so bad she had to slip her moorings and put to sea, where thrown on her beam-ends and was damaged; a seaman was washed overboard and the mate had his thigh broken, leaving only the captain and ship's boy. She bore up for Lisbon, but then the captain was washed overboard but managed to drag himself back. Then altered course for Guernsey and after 4 days and nights continuously at the helm arrived at St. Peter Port on 18 Feb. Mate to hospital.

5 Jan 1891	Lost on Goodwin Sands. Laden with stone she fought a gale in a blinding snowstorm. With visibility nil she went ashore on the Sands and the wind spun her completely round while great seas swept everything off the decks. The crew took to the rigging after getting off a single distress flare which was seen and acknowledged by the Gull Lightship. Somehow a message was got ashore and the Ramsgate lifeboat went out and by superb seamanship got alongside the vessel. In hurricane force wind and blinding snow squalls all six men were rescued from the rigging. Capt Kimber, half-frozen, was the last to leave but unfortunately slipped on the icy deck and was swept away and drowned.	EWS Vol 4-113
